

The nearshore forecast shows no recoverable oil or uncertainty bounds. The scattered remaining offshore oil is not recoverable and difficult for overflights and satellite analysis to detect. This makes model initialization unreliable. Satellite analysis and overflights will continue to look for oil, and if the need arises, trajectory forecast will resume. A decreasing amount of scattered tarballs may still come ashore during onshore wind events.